

A project in Japan seeks $320,000 in investment to create a network of energy-efficient public transportation using electric buses. With a duration of 22 months, the project focuses on reducing carbon emissions from the transport sector. Categorized as high-risk due to implementation challenges, it aims to revolutionize urban mobility while adhering to environmental standards.